Believe it or not. Shashi Tharoor is not the only net-savvy neta.

Amar Singh

The Thakur-in-distress uses his blog to express his hurt towards his erstwhile netaji and his newfound love for the Gandhis.

Narendra Modi

The controversial Gujarat chief minister is busy blogging about all possible "canards" spread against him.

L.K. Advani

From revoking Article 370 to demanding a white paper on black money stashed abroad, Advani says it all on his blog.

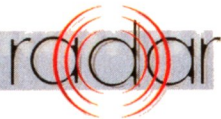

Omar Abdullah

He started blogging during his days in Central Hall. The style was light and self-deprecatory. The face of Kashmiri youth has now trendily moved on to Facebook.

Milind Deora

Deora is meticulously keeping record of parliamentary speeches and the projects undertaken by him, all of which are to be found on his Facebook page.

BANGALORE | A Fine Balance

India's Silicon Valley is set to become a 'fine' city. Except that the fine in question will compel vehicle-owners to loosen their purse strings. Bangalore's traffic police rakes in crores as fines from on-road violations. Their allies are newly installed 150-odd surveillance cameras at various junctions. The same high-tech interceptors also check speed limits and policemen can issue paper challans using their smart-phones. "The idea is to have smooth traffic and if fines can act as a deterrent, nothing like it," says Bangalore police chief Shankar Bidari. The men in uniform have reason to chuckle: nearly 1,000 vehicles are registered in the city every day.

MP MAUSAM BENAZIR'S HOME HAS BEEN INVADED BY BEES WHO HAVE DAUNTED BOTH THE FOREST DEPARTMENT AND HER STAFF.

KOLKATA | Sting Operation

The evocatively-named Mausam Benazir, newly elected MP from Malda North, is homeless these days. Reason? While she was off to Delhi and Kolkata, bees invaded her bedroom to make their hives. The Forest Department, which had been asked to clear her Kotwali residence, does not have the machinery to clean out the hives and her staffers too are daunted by the new occupants. Benazir is resolute. "I'm not returning until the residence is cleaned." The bees no doubt will be delighted. No one seems to know how to buzz them off.

DINOSAUR FOSSILS TURN THE SPOTLIGHT ON THE NARMADA VALLEY.

BHOPAL | On the Fly

Ever since the discovery of the remains of Rajasaurus narmadensis, the Narmada Valley is emerging as the pre-historic stomping ground for a variety of species of dinosaur. The latest discovery is the remains of flying dinosaurs. The fossils that have 30-ft wings have been found near the northern banks of the river at Raisen district, 25 km from Udaipur town. The site, near an old Siddhanath Ghat in Thala-Dighavan village, has hundreds of remains of different species of dinosaurs. A team of local archaeologists, led by Rajiv Choubey, now wants the state Government to declare the area protected so that excavations can be carried out.
