

crore Medanta Medicity has a blueprint that's as unique as it's new—not just in look or feel, but in orientation, purpose and spirit. It was a moment of introspection that had made Trehan plan a Medicity. "I built Escorts two decades back because at that time there were very few places in India that offered world-class treatment and technology. But one can't possibly reinvent the wheel," he says. India may have moved up the healthcare delivery ladder, but there's still a very real gap in the market. "Even now, we don't have a single place that's at the cutting-edge not just of technology and treatment but of education and research too," he points out. Medicity is a new model where application and knowledge, cure and prevention, health and wellness, work and leisure, East and West can combine.

After energy, financial services, telecom and entertainment, the might of the Reliance ADA Group has finally joined the healthcare fray with the Kokilaben Dhirubhai Ambani Hospital, a brand new jewel on Mumbai's skyline. It's, in fact, a pleasure to come to this den of luxury—from high-end salons that even work out hair solutions for chemotherapy patients, to fine-dining restaurants, art not just on the walls but also on the floors, well-appointed rooms for patients, coffee kiosks everywhere. It's a hospital that houses the best of technology—from intra-operative MRI suites to the high-end Trilogy radio-therapy equipment. "Our USP is our commitment to provide maximum care to maximum people," says chairman Tina Ambani.

Max India boss Analjit Singh had once famously said, "Hardware is out. The key differentiator is the soft side of life." He, obviously, spoke about today's healthcare consumer—demanding and discerning, intelligent and interested in the services offered to him. His hospital chain offers both—service with a smile as well as the best of technology, especially in cancer care. So long, the chain did not foray outside NCR. "Delhi and the NCR is not a city but a country," says Singh. But finally it's planning to branch out across North India—with 1,050 new beds across Dehradun, Mohali and Bathinda. "We intend to grow organically and through greenfield expansions," says Singh.

Dr Devi Prasad Shetty, who famously delivered cardiac care at Rs 10, is busy perfecting a model that no one else has dared to venture into. "We are totally different from our competitors," he says. "As health-

Dharminder Nagar started work on Paras Hospitals, Gurgaon, in 2005. The Rs 70-crore needed for his dream venture was managed through a debt equity of 1:1. He studied hospital and health systems at Imperial College, London. "It's this first hand experience as a practitioner in London hospitals that inspired me to bring international quality healthcare to India," he says. Within five years, the group has grown 30-40 per cent year on year and acquired a multispecialty hospital in South Delhi.
