Don't miss the experience

For 184 fantasy-filled days, architects and town planners from 200 countries will whisk you into a world that you have never seen but have only imagined. Their presentation of the future revolves around the central theme: 'Better city, better life'.

The India Pavilion: A tribute to 60 years of Sino-India friendship.

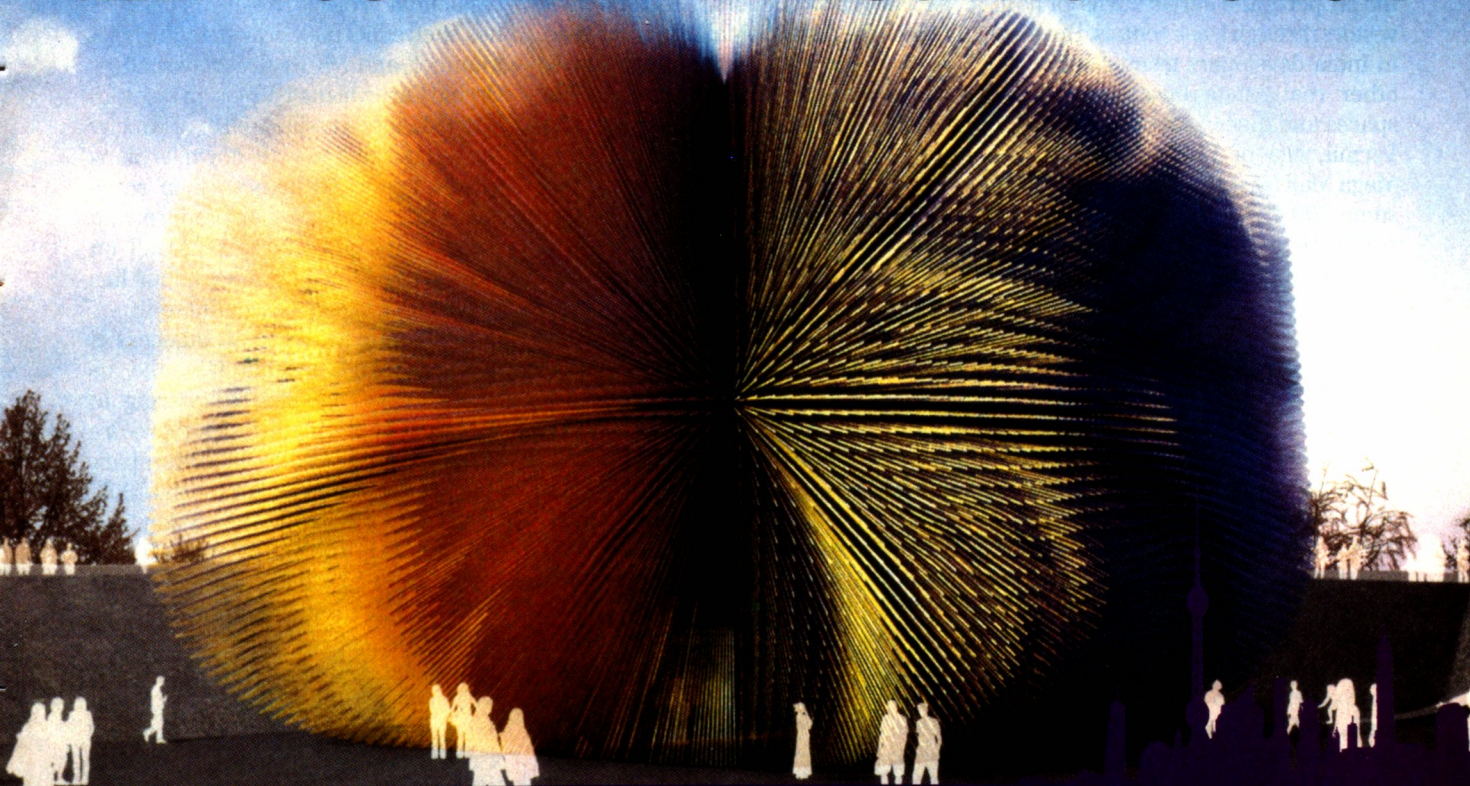

Inspired by the Sanchi Stupa built by King Ashoka, the dome-shaped India Pavilion promises to be a star attraction. Herbs grow on the dome while solar panels and wind power light up its interiors, where visitors travel through centuries of Indian culture and life, right from the first signs of civilization to the present day and beyond.

Find answers to a thousand questions. What will urban life be like in the future? Will homes be larger or smaller? What about infrastructure? Amenities? Transport? Which sources of renewable energy will power cities? How will recreation evolve? Will parks be 'greener'? Find answers to impossible questions at the World Expo 2010. See cities designed by children. Walk through parks made up of kites. Explore notions of life so advanced that they seem to be part of science fiction. And while you're in China, make the most of it.

You can't stand still in China: The World Expo 2010 takes you to the future; the rest of China takes you to the past and
