The complexities of business environment are increasing. There is tremendous pressure for growth of the business. The consumers are becoming more demanding and competition is getting intense. Technology is also playing a key role as it is redefining the boundaries of the business and is impacting the way revenues are being generated. Finding good talent is one of the key challenges that corporate are facing today. In that context, investments in education and training can be the key drivers for competitiveness of nations and companies.

The services industry in India is growing very rapidly. The hospitality industry in India has an enormous potential for growth. According to the estimates of the World Tourism Organisation, international tourist inflow in India would be 10 million by 2020, which means the tourist influx has to grow at a CAGR of 6.5 % for the next 14 years.

One of the key attributes for success of any business school and hospitality school would be employability of the graduating students. The real test of training is when the student is able to contribute meaningfully at the work place and is valued as an employee. Dr. Jauhari (2006) has enumerated that following skills are required for managers to do well on their jobs: Global exposure, customer service orientation, appreciation of cost management, and understanding on profitability and return on investment, ability to understand market trends and ability to innovate and Commitment to work
