

THAT HEALING TOUCH

State-of-the-art hospitals, groundbreaking research and major government reforms are all changing the face of healthcare in India

This is a course that can actually make a difference to millions of lives. Estimated at USD 35 billion, the Indian healthcare industry is expected to reach USD 150 billion by 2017. Cutting-edge research is already taking place in areas such as stem cells, molecular diagnostics, clinical proteomics and genomics. The impetus behind this surge is the growing economy and an increasingly aware urban population. Corporatisation, availability of high-end technology, rise of medical insurance and rigorous government initiatives in rural India have made a quintessential difference in the medical field. As of now, roughly 118 institutes dealing with healthcare management exist in India and produce close to 50,000 professionals. This number is expected to climb up to nearly one lakh graduates in the next five years to keep up with the rising demand.
