

Rural Resurgence

FEBRUARY 15, 2010

Better prices, connectivity, rural schemes, new crops and technology are among a host of factors which have changed the face of rural India and brought urban lifestyles and aspirations.

“It’s heartening to see landowners making judicious use of various schemes to change their lifestyles. This will not only reduce migration but also reduce pressure on the urban career market.”

Rural Makeover

Your cover story brought to the fore the ongoing ‘facelift’ of our villages (“Rural Resurgence”, February 15). Lifestyles getting transformed in rural areas clearly indicate that inclusive progress is happening. Whether it is through innovative farming techniques, new technologies, social welfare schemes, alternative revenue channels or switching over to vegetable farming, the fact remains that the villagers have adapted to change and toiled hard to grab opportunities and consequently march towards prosperity.

The upturn in the rural sector has been spectacular but the flip side is that

Divisive Politics

The Shiv Sena is proving itself to be political plague for Maharashtra (“Mumbai Tamasha”, February 15). The Hitlerite arrogance of Bal Thackeray and company will ruin the state. Maharashtrians must understand that the Sena is endangering their lives by seeking unwarranted protectionism for the people of the state which would only alienate them from the mainstream of the country.

The rural scenario of our country is undoubtedly changing with better connectivity and improved consumerism. But such cosmetic change has not helped to improve income and revenue generation for the farming community that continues to reel under the unprecedented debt trap due to perpetual penury. Only dignified income on their productiv-
