

Photo feature

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and Pakistan premier Zulfikar Ali Bhutto during the signing of the Simla Agreement in 1972, following the India-Pakistan war that led to the independence of East Pakistan as Bangladesh. The agreement bound the two countries to settle their differences by peaceful means through bilateral negotiations.

The chain smoking Jinnah held the British to ransom with his two-nation theory and held a series of meetings of the Muslim League urging all Muslims to join the Islamic state of Pakistan. This photograph was taken during that crucial period when his popularity was at its height.

ROY CHRONICLED EVENTS LIKE THE CABINET MISSION WHICH PROPOSED VARIOUS FORMULAS FOR INDEPENDENCE TO INDIAN LEADERS.

