

In March 1962, Jacqueline Kennedy, the glamorous wife of US President John F. Kennedy, visited India as a guest of Prime Minister Nehru and toured the country, including the Taj Mahal. Her visit was at the urging of US Ambassador John Kenneth Galbraith who felt she could play a role in balancing America's relationship with India and Pakistan. "It has been a dream," she said on the trip.

Nehru with Lal Bahadur Shastri before the prime minister's departure for the first Non-Aligned Summit at Belgrade in 1961. Shastri was Nehru's right hand man and a trusted colleague. He was the obvious choice to become India's second prime minister after Nehru's death in 1964.

