no kids) household, the chances of a pet becoming the prized possession are very high. From weekends at a spa for a relaxing massage to custom-made treats, pet parents are going that extra mile to make their little darlings feel special. Palak Bhasin, a young pet parent, can't imagine a moment without Champagne, her pet Lhasa Apso. Sparing no expense to spoil her, Bhasin says, "My pet is like my daughter and her habits are just like mine. She's very special as my husband gifted her to me five years ago. She never steps out of the house without her shoes and insists on going to the spa for grooming at least twice a month."

From mating websites, specialised bakeries and doorstep grooming services to a niche travel desk for vacations with pets, all your pet needs are waiting to be met, if you have the money to spend. Basic or extravagant, their needs are of utmost importance and in order to cater to them, a clutch of service providers have entered the fray with their wares. Owner of pet shop Windsor in Delhi's Khan Market, Mohan Khatam says, "People have always had pets, but in the last few years the demand for fancy items has gone up as people want their pets to be as stylish and healthy as they are."

Last year, Heads Up for Tails, a luxury store for pet accessories, opened in Delhi and is already quite a hit with the city's swish set. A pet lover herself, the store's owner, Rashi Narang, says she always had to shop abroad for her pet's accessories and furniture, so she thought it would be a good idea to start a store that would stock luxury items for pets. From four-poster beds to Chewy Vuitton tees and Paris Hilton collars, her store stocks all possible products for pooches. Narang says, "The biggest change has happened in the last few years as the relationship between pets and their owners has changed. Pets are now a part of the family and pet parents are learning to have a lot of fun with them. So even though mine is a boutique firm, we are doing brisk business as owners want to spoil them silly."
