Dreams in FRAMES

Seri in Latin translates to silk, and graphos in Greek means to draw. Hence the term Serigraph, or to draw with silk. Serigraphs are a new reality not just in India but in the world market when it comes to art. Which explains the three-year tryst by Lavesh Jagasia of the Serigraph studio in putting together The Complete Collection—24 serigraphs based on paintings that were milestones in artist Sakti Burman's life. Burman, whose works are resplendent with magical creatures and events, has often been likened to legendary artist Marc Chagall. Burman's work continues to be peopled by his memories of his childhood in Bangladesh. An accomplished sculptor, painter and lithographer, he has published several portfolios of his lithographs. Not too many people know that the Paris-based artist of Indian origin has illustrated several books including a collection of Mallarme's poems. "My childhood memories are always with me and they keep getting mixed up with the realities of the day," he says. The show in Mumbai marked the 75th birthday of the affable artist. "I dream a lot. I create figures in my dreams," says Burman and it is these dreams within frames that speak of beauty and aesthetics that border between the real and the surreal. At Gallery Sumukha, Bangalore till March 10.

ARTEXHIBITION

Abstract Canvas

In the exhibition titled Malevich Matters & Other Shutters, Atul Dodiya has explored roller shutters as a surface for his paintings alongside canvas and paper. These images of roller shutters are neither austere conceptualist devices nor abstract depictions of the hardware. Rather, they themselves are Dodiya paintings: images shaped from images, hand-crafted from surprising collocations of pictorial and textual data drawn from diverse sources, surfaces annotated with extracts from the artist's private archive of references. These captions of the paintings are inscribed with passages from poems, leitmotifs from novels, and quotations from the journals of filmmakers. Dodiya employs these eclectic visual languages and imageries to make critical comments on changing India. At Vadehra Art Gallery, Delhi. From March 5 to April 4.

MUSIC REVIEWS

Masterly MIXES

BAUL 'N' BEYOND
Music Today Rs 299

Baul 'n' Beyond is a communion of Jazz, traditional Baul music, Indian Classical music on a canvas of various indigenous drums along with the timeless lyrics of the Sufi saint Lalan Fakir. In the album, Tanmoy Bose has developed a balanced technique which does not restrain itself within the framework of any gharana.

TUMSA NAHIN
DEKHA Saregama
Rs 125

There is something romantic about the sound and feel of the piano.

In this album, Piano maestro Brian Silas plays film melodies which include Piya tose naina lage re (Guide), Aage bhi jane na tu (Waqf) among others. It's yesterday once more. Go down the memory lane with some soothing music.

SHIV AAVAHAN
EMI Rs 295

The four CD-set of a chanting series combines music and text to make for a scintillating experience.

The singers who have lent their voices are Shankar Mahadevan, Sawani Shende, Sadhna Sargam, Sanjeev Abhayankar, Devki Pandit and Vijay Prakash. A must for those prayerful moments.
