Corporate India's massive investments for the next three years clearly show that the demand for goods and services is rising. The INDIA TODAY-Ma Foi Employment Trends Survey takes a look at the opportunities in store for job-seekers.

India seems to be in the pink of health. The blush is not one of pink slips, but of economic growth. After the global financial meltdown of October 2008, the economy is back on track. Even as the world economy is struggling to come out of recession, Indian consumers are splurging on cars and consumer goods. And to meet this growth in demand, companies are now investing heavily. Not surprisingly, the job market is revving up too. Expected to invest $250 billion over the next three years, corporate India's confidence is back. Believe it or not, close to a million new jobs will be added by the organised sector in 2010-11, an increase of nearly 10 per cent over 2007, a watershed year of sorts for the job market.

The INDIA TODAY-Ma Foi Employment Trends Survey put 11 hot sectors under the scanner to understand how many jobs will be added in 2010 and the top cities that will witness the most job creation. In order to understand trends and hiring plans, 1,000 companies have been quizzed, across all major industry segments, geographical areas and size in the short and medium term. With economic growth expected to be in the 7 to 8 per cent range, India Inc will create 9,17,000 new jobs in 2010-11. This is a modest estimate, which may well change going forward. According to a quarterly survey done by international recruitment firm Antal on hiring and firing, about 71 per cent of Indian organisations are hiring in 2010 and 78 per cent are likely to hire managerial staff over the next three months.

No wonder, Indians are the most optimistic people in the world. The optimism is not based on state-sponsored steroids, but domestic demand. Indians believe that they will get better jobs and salary increases this year. Almost as if on cue, the output of India's factories has been steadily rising in the last two quarters, anticipating an increase in consumption. The index for industrial production has risen 16.8 per cent from a year earlier in January, after expanding by 11.8 per cent in November last year.

Healthcare

The booming healthcare sector is expected to create nine million jobs by 2012.

Hospitality

As India adds new hotels, the sector will require an additional one lakh people every year.

IT and ITES

This sector will grow at a moderate pace of 5.5 per cent this year and so jobs are back.

Real Estate and Construction

With investments of over $100 billion lined up, this sector will witness major hiring.

Education

India faces a shortage of about two lakh schools. To plug the gap, investments are flowing in.

The demand from the client side is back, especially for front level employees. I see an increase of 60-70 per cent in hiring over last year.

With an increase in rural consumption, the FMCG sector is growing at 30-35 per cent. Therefore, there is a need to recruit good talent.
