Key reasons why an investor should consider ELSS as a tax-saving instrument

- Tax-Savings benefit under Section 80C of Income Tax Act, 1961
- Potential for capital appreciation through investments in equities
- Capital Gains Tax-Free at redemption
- Shorter lock-in period of 3 years as compared to other tax-savings instruments
 - Allows regular investments of small amounts through the SIP route

Why tax-saving instruments?

Section 80C of the Income Tax Act, 1961 allows deduction in the tax liability of an individual, if he invests in certain specified tax saving instruments, which allow deductions from one's taxable income (maximum investment of Rs. 1,00,000) and hence lead to a savings in tax upto a maximum of Rs. 30,900 (if you are in the highest tax slab).

What should an investor bear in mind?

There is a wide array of tax-saving instruments like Provident Fund (PF), Public Provident Fund, ELSS, NSC, Post Office term deposits, etc. One needs to decide his individual goals before investing, in keeping with his risk appetite. One can also link his tax planning to his long-term goals like buying a house or child's education and hence invest with a mid to long term perspective.

Keeping this in mind, an Equity Linked Savings Scheme (ELSS), like HSBC Tax Saver Equity Fund offers the benefits of tax savings, whilst providing a vehicle to invest in equities with an aim to generate reasonable returns.

An ELSS also offers Systematic Investment Plan (SIP) option, in case one decides to invest small amounts, periodically, rather than a lump sum amount at the end of the year.
