

FILM REVIEW

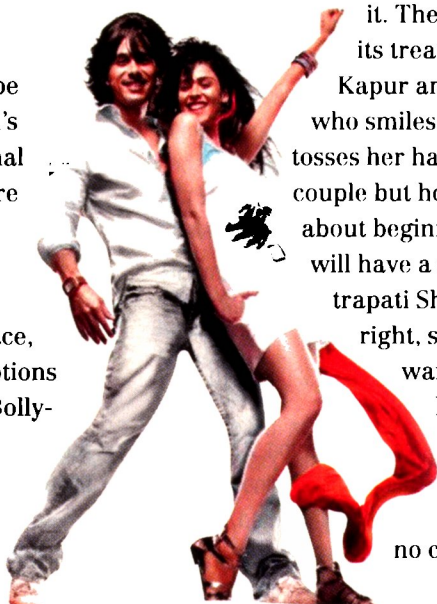

CHANCE PE DANCE

Shaky Moves

RATING ★ ★ ☆ ☆ ☆

Director: Ken GhoshStarring: Shahid Kapur, Genelia D'Souza

Can an entire movie be dedicated to one man's dimples and abdominal muscles? Well if you're a Bollywood studio desperate for a hit, it can. So here's Shahid Kapur, lip gloss in place, going through the motions of his own ascent in Bollywood. Struggler from Delhi lives in a car, bathes in a school washroom, wears

Ed Hardy knock-offs and wins a youth channel contest. And because he has a big heart beating under that artfully waxed chest, he also helps a group of loser children win an inter-school dance competition. Ken Ghosh was originally a music video director and on the basis of his career so far, it can safely be said that he should return to

it. The plot is jaded and its treatment pedestrian.

Kapur and Genelia D'Souza, who smiles as much as she tosses her hair, make a winsome couple but how many movies about beginners in Bollywood will have a shot of the Chhatrapati Shivaji Terminus? All right, so the boy doesn't want to be a star for himself but his late mother. Cue violins and maudlin music. But sorry no chance, no dance. KB

ART EXHIBITION

Varied STROKES

Contemporary artist Ravikumar Kashi will show his latest work titled The Game in Bangalore next week. Known for his innovative use of mixed media, ranging from digital prints and installations using plaster of paris and wood, Kashi has been at the forefront of the experimental art scene in India for the last few years. His latest show comprises a set of 25 photographs and a video. "I embarked on a photographic project four years ago, juxtaposing various objects in my studio and photographing them in such a manner as to evoke multiple meanings far beyond the sum total of their individual connotations," says Kashi. This particular show consists of work that has transcended a single medium. The final product, the photograph, is art that was in its earlier avatar, a sculpture or an installation. The Game has been edited and curated from a body of work by poet and writer Ranjit Hoskote. At Sumukha Gallery from February 3 till February 20. The show travels to Chennai, Mumbai and Delhi in the coming months.

by Nirmala Ravindran

A WORK BY KASHI

EXHIBITION

A Creative Den

ARTWORK ON DISPLAY AT LE SUTRA

What Le Sutra is India's first art hotel displaying works based on different themes. The 16 rooms of the hotel are named after characters from Indian history and mythology and narrate a different story. For instance, the room named after Karan has a chair with his chariot carved on it. It also features paintings of him climbing the mountain and a sculpture of an arrow that he used among other things. Each object on display is uniquely designed to complement the theme of Indian mythology and can be viewed by anyone through a 3D interactive system. The art pieces will be changed every two to three years.

Who The hotel has displayed works by over 100 sculptors and artists, including A.A. Almelkar, Charan Sharma, Ravi Paranjape and Jinsook Shinde. At present, it is open to people only by invitation. Beginning March, the general public too will be able to have a look at this unique concept.

Where Le Sutra,
14, Union Park,
Khar, Mumbai.

by Mitali Patel