

Manmohan is Obama's first state guest at the White House

India is an important voice at the two G-20 summits

India signs key civilian nuclear deals with France and Russia

At Copenhagen, India's flexible approach makes it a key player

India signs landmark Free Trade Agreement with ASEAN

IN THE BIG LEAGUE NOW

India found its place at the high table but with its neighbours, as Sharm el-Sheikh showed, the performance was scratchy

By Raj Chengappa

Ever since his second term as prime minister began in May, Manmohan Singh has been out on foreign tours so often that in South Block he is now jocularly known as the 'Flying Sikh'—a sobriquet reserved for India's most famous athlete of the 1960s. In June, Manmohan was in the Russian city of Yekaterinburg to attend the

BRIC and SCO summits. In July he was at La Aquila in Italy for the G8+5 summit, then flew to Paris for a bilateral with France and followed it up with an address at the NAM summit at Sharm el-Sheikh in Egypt. This is where he made the faux pas in his meeting with Pakistan Prime Minister Yousaf Raza Gilani, but more of that later. In September he was in Pittsburgh, USA, for the

G-20 meet on how to save the global economy. Next month saw him in Thailand rubbing shoulders with ASEAN leaders. In November he was back in the US with Barack Obama bestowing him the honour of being his first state guest at the White House. In December, Manmohan flew to Moscow for the annual pow-wow with the Russian leadership and then capped it with an extraordinary summit at

Manmohan faux pas on Pakistan at Sharm el-Sheikh

Relations with China deteriorate. Border issues hit an impasse.

Nepal's first Maoist government falls. Blames India.

Iran signs gas pipeline deal with Pakistan ignoring India

Discordant voices mar MEA with Shashi Tharoor twittering away

