

the UN Climate Change Conference in Copenhagen, Denmark, that saw India play a key role.

If Manmohan is much in demand, it is recognition of the fact that India is now in the big league of nations. He was seated at the high table not just in the Danish capital but at all key meetings involving the world economy and political affairs whether at the G-20 Pittsburgh meet or their April summit in London. IF MANMOHAN WAS MUCH IN DEMAND, IT WAS IN RECOGNITION OF INDIA'S GROWING VOICE ON THE GLOBAL STAGE. APART from being feted by Barack Obama, leaders of both France and Russia signed key civilian nuclear deals with the prime minister—solid proof that his landmark N-deal with the US had borne fruit.

Obama, leaders of both France and Russia signed key civilian nuclear deals with Manmohan—solid proof that his landmark deal with the US had borne fruit. The peripatetic prime minister even picked up a green sheen at Copenhagen with his bold, forward looking and flexible approach. Summing up 2009, India's External Affairs Minister S.M. Krishna said: "We were able to work out new equations with key countries, gave substance and form to our foreign policy, making it forward-looking and predictable rather than ad hoc. India has asserted itself."

Globally India seemed to have been punching to its weight but when it came to its neighbourhood, its performance has been
