Pain and PLEASURE

Nature has placed man under the governance of two sovereign masters, pain and pleasure. But Mumbai-based painter Anju Dodiya, 45, cautions that her exhibition Necklace of Echoes is not a celebration of pain but an emotion by itself. The watercolours and charcoal is a suite of self-portraits cast in the mode of intense suffering. Dodiya meditates here on the versatility of the necklace which is a recurring motif in her work. It connotes adornment, honour and beauty. Equally, it signals greed, humiliation and death. The necklace is both an armour and a noose or an albatross that drags one to a painful state. "The watercolours are not exactly autobiographical but are influenced by the events happening around you, be it 26/11 or the helplessness of one's existence," says Dodiya. For example in Promise, she balances the torsion of creativity with the traction of pain, maintaining this unsteady equilibrium. The painting that epitomises the emotional drama is Finger Necklace, named after the tragic hero of the Buddhist parable of Angulimala, an aristocrat's son who was made to believe that he would achieve divinity if he killed a thousand people and wore a necklace made from their fingers. Each work is a narrative in an emotional atmosphere and Dodiya captures it well. From January 15 to February 15 at Vadehra Art Gallery, Delhi.

Indian Tribute

The Goethe-Institut and the Attakkalari Center for Movement Arts, Bangalore, come together to pay tribute to the pioneer of contemporary dance theatre, Philippine Bausch, through a show titled For Pina which will be held in Bangalore, followed by Mumbai and Delhi. Bausch had a long love-affair with India and its dancers. She created an India-specific production titled Bamboo Blues which performed extensively across India in 2008. On January 30 at the Ranga Shankara, Bangalore.
