

1975-2009: The Secret History

DECEMBER 28, 2009

As the shards of political turmoil and the fruits of economic growth of the last 35 years collide in uneven ways, it's time for India to have a new social contract.

“A nation's history is not shaped by great events alone. Events such as Sunil Gavaskar reaching the 10,000-run milestone or a family saga called Hum Log also occupy a vital space in Indian history.”

Past Perfect

Your special issue made for wonderful reading (“The Secret History”, December 28). The write-ups covered incidents or accidental happenings from 1975 to 2009 without missing anything. It depicted the impact of each incident on the country and the people in right perspective. However, it is only those nations that are able to pick up the best of such instances and stubbornly discard the rest that have survived to rule the roost, facing boldly any unprecedented and unforeseen onslaught on them with the desired determination.

Politics of Division

The Centre's decision to announce the bifurcation of Andhra Pradesh will pave the way for similar demands from other states (“Dividends of Division”, December 28). After Independence, fragmented states were united to make the nation stronger. But today votebank politics is misleading people and spreading regionalism.

The Telangana imbroglio, which is being repeated after 40 years, is an unfortunate thing to happen to Andhra Pradesh. All this will only help in taking Telangana backward, and strengthen the hands of secessionist elements like Naxals and Maoists operating in several parts of the region's districts with impunity. A separate Telangana state will become a haven for anti-nationals, which will create more problems for the country.
