

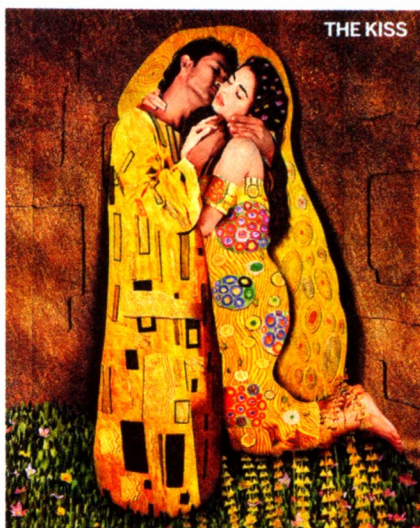

PHOTO EXHIBITION

Mirror IMAGES

Now photographs are being made to look like paintings. Fashion photographer Rohit Chawla's photo rendition of the great master, Gustav Klimt, for a 2010 calendar commissioned by the Bird Group is a case in point. Chawla was inspired by the sensuality and underlying eroticism of Klimt's paintings. He followed Klimt's work back to his home town Vienna. "I became hooked to his Byzantine luxuriance of form, the vivid juxtaposition of colours derived from the Austrian rococo," says Chawla. Back in India he selected models who had some resemblance to Klimt's. He was assisted by the master craftsman, Manoranjan Mukherjee, who created the props, iconic sets and accessories. He glued together the patterns in raised relief on imaginary garments that completely shielded the models. The exhibition will start on January 16 to 20 at the Visual Arts Gallery, the India Habitat Centre, Delhi.

by S. Sahaya Ranjit

FILM REVIEWS

PYAAR IMPOSSIBLE
Toothy Torture

RATING ★☆☆☆☆

Director: Jugal Hansraj
Starring: Priyanka Chopra,
Uday Chopra

There is a particular genre of movies where the production designer is the most important member of the crew. Where the costume designer calls the shots despite being nothing more than a glorified high-street shopper. And where good locations substitute for good cinematography. This is that kind of a movie, which is why Priyanka Chopra, briefly seen making an effort in Fashion and Kaminey, lapses into her broad Manhattan-meets-Mumbai accent. And does little else but flash her legs for Uday Chopra to gaze at. Love blossoms between the toothy twosome amidst red walls, sunflower yellow chairs and blue skies. Any spontaneity in the film is killed by dialogues inspired by The Secret: "If you want something, you have to dream it." But hey, you need more than dreams to get this re-tread of loser-hero-gets-gorgeous-girl story. Not even the precocious little girl who wants to be a rock star can save this tripe from heading the way of Uday's career. Sorry, Priyanka, next time try to play a single, divorced, working mother in a film that is less cardboard and more character.

by Kaveree Bamzai

DULHA MIL GAYA

Dump the Diva

RATING ★☆☆☆☆

Director: Mudassar Aziz
Starring: Sushmita Sen,
Fardeen Khan

Is Sushmita Sen the most affected woman in Bollywood? Does she actually believe she is, as the cutesy cushions on her couch say, Diva? She plays a supermodel who has everything, a great house in the Caribbean, a devoted boyfriend (Shah Rukh Khan in a 20-minute role, playing the improbably named Pavan Raj Gandhi), and a good-time friend Fardeen Khan, as a playboy with the proverbial "lakhon ki jaidad". There's also a dog, a chef who is campily gay and a Girl Friday who fetches for the dog. The film involves lots of lounging around a cruise, some self-improvement lessons for a Punjabi kudi and jokes about latrines.

It's great for the tan but we have just one message to Ms Sen. The Miss Universe crown was in 1994. Wake up. -KB

