Global AMBASSADOR

A project with Mick Jagger and Dave Stewart, formerly of the Eurythmics. A soundtrack for a movie, Couples Retreat, that has grossed over $150 million worldwide. A seven-city Jai Ho tour followed by a world concert next year. Two Oscars, one Golden Globe, a BAFTA and two Grammy nominations down, the man who has been invited to the White House twice already this year, now has a permanent presence on the global entertainment scene. Not just because he's been signed on by the finest music agent in Hollywood, or has just bought a small studio in Los Angeles, to match the one he has in London, but because though he's been on the road, performing or meeting musicians for seven months of the year, the music hasn't stopped, whether it was Blue or the forthcoming Tamil film, Gautham Menon's Vinnai Thandi Varuvaya. Coming up are Robot, Raavan, I-800-Love and Sultan, and opportunities for many more to come through the global door he cracked open with the success of Bombay Dreams on the West End in 2002.

Fraternal COMBAT

When elephants fight, it's the grass underneath that suffers. This could apply to 23 lakh investors in the Reliance Group companies. Because no matter which brother wins, shareholders in the other brother's company will suffer. The argument continues even four years after the brothers smoked the peace pipe. In the year gone by, Anil has gone back to doing what he does best—crying foul over his brother reneging on the family settlement, under which his Reliance Natural Resources is supposed to get gas for 17 years. The two corporate behemoths, controlled by either, are battling it out in courts
