

CUFFS AND COLLARS

CUFF

BARRELL OR BUTTON

CUFF: Most shirts come with single button cuffs, but the more dressier ones come with two and three button options. The cuff corners are sometimes angled in the more formal ones. Some formal barrel cuffs shirts also have holes for the cufflink option.

FRENCH OR DOUBLE

CUFF: The cuff is folded back with holes aligned in a way that they can be fastened by cufflinks instead of buttons. It is invariably a formal shirt and ideal to be worn with a jacket where a quarter inch of the cuff peeps out of the jacket sleeve.

THE TURNBACK CUFF:

This is a more recent innovation, first created in the 1960s by the famous British tailor Turnbull & Asser for Sean Connery when he played James Bond in Dr No. Here the cuff itself is fastened with two buttons, but has a French Cuff type flap which is turned back at an angle.

COLLAR

SPREAD COLLAR:

This is a collar where the points are spread wide apart. Meant to be worn only with a tie and hence the shirt is invariably a formal one.

WHITE CONTRAST:

A white collar (and the white French cuff) which contrasts with the colour and pattern of the fabric on the body and sleeve of the shirt.

BAND COLLAR:

Also known as a Chinese or Mandarin collar. It is a band of fabric that is stitched to the neck of the shirt instead of a collar. It can be worn as formal or casual wear, with or without a jacket.

WING COLLAR: Wing-tip or wing collar is a collar that sits atop dress shirts that are worn with tuxedos. It is shaped to fit a bow tie. It is a vertical standing collar with an extended tip that is folded down.
