

DELHI | Parking Trouble

An inter-services cold war has broken out between the army and the Indian Air Force (IAF) over just where the former's six C-130J aircraft are to be located. The specially modified aircraft are being acquired for over $1 billion (Rs 4,400 crore) under a 2007 contract from the US for the army's special forces. The first of the planes are due to arrive later this year and the army, which paid for them, wants them to be positioned in Agra to replace the ageing An-32s used by the para brigade. Last used to quell a coup in the Maldives two decades ago, the brigade is India's largest air-mobile response force. The IAF, however, has already decided to position the aircraft at the Hindon air force base near Delhi where it says it has created the support facilities for the C-130s. Upset at not being consulted by its sister service, the army is believed to be planning to present its case before Defence Minister A.K.

KERALA | In the Ring

Suspended IGP Tomin Thachankary claims that he is being witchhunted for going abroad "without permission from the Government" and being made a scapegoat in the CPI(M)'s factionalism. Taking on Chief Minister V.S. Achuthanandan, he has submitted a list of officials who went abroad but were not prosecuted.
