ever, is a minor aberration in an otherwise exhaustive chargesheet submitted by Mumbai's CID branch, the full and final investigation into the events of 26/11. What the chargesheet also does is to nail the Pakistan connection in irrefutable detail and expose Islamabad's constant state of denial as fraudulent along with its soft approach towards the key conspirators, Hafiz Saeed and Lakhvi. Kasab's Pakistani background has been clearly established by the media in his own country, which proved he came from an impoverished family in Faridkot: his father sold food from a handcart and there was barely enough to feed the five children. The local media also traced his journey to Lahore and his initial contact with L^{ET} through his father in 2007. Time magazine uncovered the fact that Kasab's family was promised $4,000 or 150,000 Pakistan rupees by his L^{ET} handlers if the 26/11 attack was successful. The Pakistan connection in the chargesheet is quite damaging and includes the following facts uncovered in the investigation.

■ The inflatable dinghy used by the terrorists after abandoning M.V. Kuber, the Indian trawler they had hijacked on the high seas to reach Mumbai, had an outboard engine manufactured by Yamaha Motor Corporation, Japan. The investigation revealed that the engine was shipped to a firm called Business & Engineering Trends in Pakistan with the address: 24, Habibulla Road, Off Davis Road, Lahore, Pakistan.

■ The live hand grenades recovered from the dead terrorists and Kasab were stamped "Arges 84", a lethal Austrian-design plastic hand grenade used for anti-personnel purposes. Arges had given the franchise to manufacture grenades to "Wah Nobel Co," an ordnance factory located at Wah, near Islamabad. Similar grenades were used in the serial bomb blasts in Mumbai in March 1993 and also in the attack on the Parliament House, Delhi, on December 13, 2001.

■ The investigation based on Kasab's interrogation and confession revealed that the 10 terrorists were handpicked from a larger group and trained at various locations inside Pakistan and Pakistan Occupied Kashmir. A person referred to as Major General Sahab, believed to be a retired Pakistan army general, was present when the 10 attackers were given commando training at Muridke, the L^{ET}'s headquarters. The training was also held at Muridke, Mansehra, Muzaffarabad, Azizabad and Paanch Teni and were gruelling and increasingly sophisticated. The schedule started with physical fitness, mainly running and swimming, and then graduated to the next stage—handling weapons. They were trained by men who were experts in battle inoculation, guerrilla warfare, firing sophisticated assault weapons, use of hand grenades and rocket launchers as well as operating GPS and satellite phones and map reading. The trainers were named as Abu Hamza, Fahadullah,
