Entering Cama Hospital, they again started firing their AK-47s and throwing grenades, but by now, a red alert had been sounded and armed Mumbai Police were fanning out. A police party entered Cama Hospital but lost an officer and a constable to terrorist bullets which seriously injured other uniformed personnel. Having stopped the police posse, the two walked almost nonchalantly down Mahapalika Marg, killing a police

Kamte and senior inspector Vijay Salaskar. Kamte was the only one who managed to hit the target, wounding Kasab on both hands. Undeterred by his wounds, Kasab managed to throw out the bodies from the Qualis and drove towards Metro junction, firing at the unsuspecting crowd which had gathered there, killing two persons including another policeman. The earlier police firing, however, had hit one of the tyres and when the jeep reached he grabbed the wireless set installed in the vehicle and informed the Control Room about the incident and the whereabouts of Kasab and his partner. The message was relayed on the police wireless channel and in reaction, a police party from the Dr. D.B. Marg Police Station reached Café Ideal in Chowpatty and set up a roadblock.

This stopped all traffic on the north-bound lane of N.S. Purandare Marg on which the terrorists were officer who was regulating the movement of traffic and people.

They then entered Badruddin Tayabjee Lane and tried to hijack a vehicle by firing at the driver of a passing government car. The driver stopped but Kasab's plan was thwarted by the approach of a police Qualis. They hid behind a tree but they had been spotted and the police officers and one of the constables opened fire on Kasab and his partner who retaliated with deadly bursts from their AK-47s at close range, killing three senior police officers and three constables. The officers were ATS chief Hemant Karkare, Additional Commissioner Ashok Mittal Tower on Rajani Patel Marg, the vehicle came to a halt. Abandoning the Qualis, the duo then hijacked a Skoda car which was coming from the opposite direction. The terrified driver and two other occupants of the car were evicted at gunpoint.

The terrorists had seemingly forgotten about a passenger in the abandoned jeep: police naik Arun Jadhav had been seriously injured in the earlier exchange of fire and had collapsed in the rear seat. The terrorists may have presumed him to be dead but the moment they left the jeep, headed. The Skoda reached the barrier and the occupants were ordered to switch off the headlights so the police could see the passengers. Instead, Kasab switched on the water spray on the windscreen to obscure a clear view of the occupants. They then attempted to make a U-turn but only succeeded in crashing into the road dividers. Seeing the police approach, Ismail started firing from his pistol. On the other side, Kasab was approached by Assistant Sub-Inspector Tukaram Ombale who grabbed the AK-47 Kasab had hidden between his legs. Kasab pulled the trigger, killing Ombale on the spot.

However, the struggle allowed as other policemen rushed to the vehicle and overpowered Kasab. Abu Ismail was badly wounded and was declared dead by the attending doctor when the two were rushed to the hospital. Kasab was still alive and would get the death penalty on May 6, 2010. Fate has finally caught up with the killing machine from Pakistan. The only dots left to be connected are the key conspirators who are safe and secure in Pakistan. Hafiz Saeed and Lakhvi have been openly holding public meetings calling for jihad since there is unfinished business in Mumbai. Under farcical arrest and outlawed by the international community, they continue to propagate their evil agenda. Till they are brought to justice, Kasab's guilty verdict will remain just a bloody footnote in the day of carnage now known as 26/11. ■
