The New Kingpin

The Congress high command is showing exemplary maturity by brushing aside the voices in support of Jaganmohan Reddy and choosing K. Rosaiah as the chief minister of Andhra Pradesh by taking into account his relative merits ("The Mourning After", October 19). Reddy must learn the nuances of politics and be prepared to don the mantle when the time for smooth transition comes. K.R. SRINIVASAN, Opposition within the ruling party is much more crucial than opposition from outside. The best way to elect a chief minister is to do it by compulsory vote of all MLAs through electronic voting machines on nominations signed by at least one-third of the members. A no-confidence motion may also be adopted in the same manner but with the compulsion to name an alternate leader.

More of the Same

I agree with HRD Minister Kapil Sibal that introducing new IIMs would help in promoting higher education ("Is More Better?", October 12). A balance needs to be maintained between demand and supply. Considering a drastic rise in the number of students taking CAT, it's high time the Government took a call so that the proportion of students securing admission in these institutes remains constant. The problem of faculty crunch can be tackled by providing greater incentives to those for prosperity in West Bengal. The story is the same in Kerala where the leaders blame the Centre for their mismanagement. S. LAKSHMI,

Road to Nowhere

Thousands of illegal Bangladeshis and Pakistanis roam freely in India, cause bomb blasts, get ration cards and voting rights ("The Nowhere

“ Rather than depending on elite institutions like the IITs and IIMs, the Centre and the states should replicate the state-run residential school concept to have a varied pool of talent. ”

Lone Ranger

Buddhadeb Bhattacharya is a disappointed man ("Lord of the Ruins", October 12). The dogmatic attitude of the CPI(M) cadres did not give him much of leeway in terms of development to pave the way People", October 5). On the other hand, the Hindus who cross over to India to escape the extremist Wahhabis in Pakistan are denied basic amenities and are hounded, thanks to the votebank politics, political parties' apathy and the greed of the government officials.

Musical Chairs

As the judge got ready to pronounce his judgement, a conscience-stricken witness rushed in breathlessly with testimony that could let the palpitating accused off the hook. This has been the climax of many a Hindi film. But last fortnight there were faint shades of such a surprising turn of events when the Supreme Court was hearing the final and only appeal of Sanjay, son of Congress (I) President Indira Gandhi, who has been convicted of destroying a political film, Kissa Kursi Ka. In an affidavit the film's producer, Amrit Nahata, 51, confessed that he had colluded with the prosecution to implicate Sanjay. He told INDIA TODAY that he had made the submission because he did not "want justice to be miscarried". In an affidavit filed before Chief Justice Y.V. Chandrachud he alleged that Caretaker Prime Minister Charan Singh, who was home minister in 1977 when the case was initiated, and N.K. Singh, deputy inspector general of CBI, who, as a superintendent had investigated the case, instigated him to go against Sanjay.
