Conflict of interest becomes a serious matter of parliamentary ethics as more and more businessmen and industrialists pack influential House committees

In the last session of the Lok Sabha, TDP member from Khammam, Andhra Pradesh, Namma Nageswara Rao, raised a question related to highways. "Whether the Government proposes to start eight-lane express highways. If so, the details thereof along with the locations," he quizzed the minister for road transport and highways. It can be passed as one of the dreary queries in Question Hour, until we look closely at the member. Nageswara is not your ordinary MP. A non-executive chairman of Madhucan, his group has the National Highways Authority of India (NHAI) on its client list.
