

ART EXHIBITION

Living BRONZE

"I don't like art that has finesse. If it has finesse, it is finished," says 53-year-old sculptor K.S. Radhakrishnan who is exhibiting his bronze works after a gap of two years at Delhi's Lalit Kala Akademi Gallery. The exhibition Liminal Figures, Liminal Space, has 525 figures. Don't look for connections between these figures. Each one is unique and is in motion. Radhakrishnan believes 'to be in motion is what life is all about'. "Each one is landing in threshold. I have made them all in a ragged form because sculpture is not a handicraft. It is a living and growing process where one aims at perfection but no one really knows what perfection is and where we go from there," he philosophises. He has called the male figure Musui who has been on a journey with him for years since his student days at Santiniketan. Musui was a young Santhal male model who posed for him. Radhakrishnan was captivated by Musui and conceived his anatomy in his sculptures. He then created a character by the name of Maiya. The iconic images of Musui and Maiya are hoisted on pillars and the ramp is colonised by the multitudes that come together, creating a new concept of space. The ramp has miniaturised figures of Musui and Maiya, all either descending or ascending it. If we see the ramp at different levels, it gives varied perspectives—it could be a dance floor, objects moving on the conveyor belt or a milling crowd of pilgrims on the move. "The movement continues as it is evolving. It does not end and goes beyond and that is for the viewer to perceive," says Radhakrishnan. Sculpture is known to be a still medium but Radhakrishnan puts life into his creations; he makes them dance and sing. Experience that evolving space. On view till November 25.

MUSIC FESTIVAL

Earth SHIFTERS

The live music shrine Blue Frog presents frogFEST 2009 in Delhi. The first in a series of nationwide festivals will take place at Amphitheatre and Magique, Garden of Five Senses, on November 14 and 15 from 5 to 10 p.m. Here are some highlights.

Midival Punditz (Nov 15) They are quite rightly called the champions of electronica in India. Delhi boys Tapan Raj and Gaurav Raina have made Midival Punditz a much sought-after act. If there's any club worth its turntable, there's a good chance that the Punditz have performed there.

Smoke (Nov 14) Business partners Dhruv Ghanekar and Ashutosh Phatak are music collaborators too. Trained in Indian and Western classical respectively, they formed Smoke. They also set up Blue Frog, a platform for new bands, with Srila Chatterjee and Mahesh Mathai of Highlight Films.

Soulmate (Nov 14) The North-east has always loved rock but only recently have bands from the region made themselves heard. Soulmate is one of the better known. Vocalists Rudy Wallang and Tipriti Kharbangar have made it quite the concert favourite.
