mentioned visa was issued with due scrutiny of the available documents and following guidelines."

It is hard to be specific about what it is that Headley and the LeT may have been planning in India but if the exchange between him and Individual A is any indication something was afoot. On July 10, 2009, Individual A told Headley: "There are some investment plans with me, not exactly at Rahul's city but near that."

The FBI believes that in July 2009, LeT Member A was placing a higher priority on using Headley to assist in planning a new attack in India than on completing the planned attack in Denmark. After this time, it appears that Headley and Individual A continued the planning of an attack with Kashmiri, rather than LeT."

Headley was arrested at the O'Hare airport on October 3 while boarding a flight from Chicago to Philadelphia. Fifteen days later Rana was arrested. His arrest was preceded by some 100 agents raiding the farming village of Kinsman in Illinois with a population of 109 where he owned a 'halal' slaughterhouse.

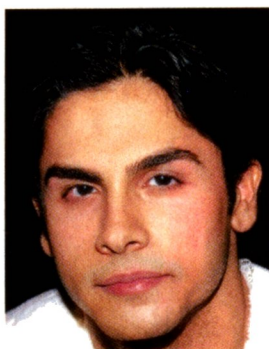

With the two in federal custody at the Metropolitan Correctional Centre in downtown Chicago, it is now matter of the US law specifically dealing with terrorism charges taking its course. According to the Assistant US Attorney Samborn, Rana had sought to be released from the custody the head of chancery at the Indian Consulate, Rana and his wife were given Indian business visas on October 31, 2008, with a one-year validity expiring October 30, 2009. It is not clear how many times Rana travelled to India but the last trip he made was in November when he flew back to Chicago just a fortnight before the 26/11 attacks.

To the question whether Rana's visa application was vetted properly considering he is of Pakistani origin and stricter issuance rules apply to him, Sapkal said, "The Consulate General of India, Chicago, issued the above mentioned visa to Tahawwur Rana as per the established procedure for issuance of visas to persons of Pakistani origin. As per the procedure, no prior clearance from the Ministry of Home Affairs was required in such cases. The above on bond. A similar hearing for Headley could take place on December 4. However, given the cross-continental frenzy generated in India, it is anybody's guess when and if the two could be out on bond any time soon.

INDIA TODAY could not contact Rana's attorney for this report. However, The Washington Post had quoted Patrick W. Blegen, an attorney for Rana, as saying that his client is a "well-respected businessman in the Chicagoland community. He adamantly denied the charges and eagerly awaits his opportunity to contest them in court, and to clear his name and his family's name". John Theis, an attorney for Headley, also declined to comment. With two suspects in the US and the masterminds still in Pakistan, the jury is still out on the 26/11 conspiracy. ■
