

IT WAS MOTHER SANYOGITA WHO INTRODUCED SALONI DAINI TO THE WORLD OF SHOWBIZ

day, the more popular ones get Rs 10,000-15,000.

"If you want to know how the parents are, just observe the child. They learn everything from them," says Shilpa Gupta, a Delhi-based psychologist who doubles as a parenting coach and has worked with 65 parents so far. Most mothers see nothing wrong in wanting their children to be the picture of perfection, locked in a schedule likely to create a cross between an Olympic champion and a Harvard major. Just as they see nothing wrong in making them give up their present for their future. Like Shilpa Budhraj, 27, a Delhi-based homemaker who loaned her year-old baby, Jayaditya, to Rakhi Sawant and her then partner Elesh Parujanwala for the show Pati, Patni Aur Woh. Her older child, Drishya, 7, also acts in advertisements. Jayaditya would cry for over two hours when handed over to Rakhi and Elesh. Ask her if she ever considered pulling him off the show and pat comes the reply. "No, I gave him some time. He eventually adjusted to his new surroundings. Plus it was just a matter of 10 days," Budhraj says.

The Pushy Dad

HE'S CHEERLEADER, COACH AND COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF

The dogged mummy has an equal in the pushy father, made infamous by the driven fathers of sports stars such as Tiger Woods and the Williams sisters. Take Sameer Gor, 37, an investment and insurance agent, father of child-star Avika Gor, 12, who plays the protagonist in Balika Vadhu. Gor identified his daughter's talent when she was performing at a school function on stage. "One day at a dance show, a casting director approached me to help Avika star in a TV show. I immediately took her for the audition

STARRY SPATS

When it comes to taking on family, B-town stars are ahead of the rest

RAKHI SAWANT

Controversy-clad Rakhi Sawant and her family have been frank about their incompatibility. Bragging about her rags-to-riches story, she has gone public with her family's orthodox and exploitative nature. Unhappy with her item girl status but proud of her high earnings, her family accepts her when she allows them, her swayamvar being a case in point.

SHERLYN CHOPRA

The actor-singer left home at the age of 16 and drove from her hometown Hyderabad to Mumbai in a car as she "couldn't take the constant quarrelling at home". After her father's death in 2005, she tried to reconcile with her mother and two siblings. "Big B tried to make peace between us during Bigg Boss, but it didn't work out."

AMEESHA PATEL

Actor Ameesha Patel sued her father, Amit Patel, in 2004 for a share of her earnings, saying she "was wronged" and would fight for her rights till the end. They made up though.

SUNIDHI CHAUHAN

At the peak of her successful career, singing sensation Sunidhi Chauhan's family disowned her when she secretly married music video director and choreographer, Bobby Khan. The union, however, lasted only for a year, after which she filed for divorce, and eventually reconciled with her parents.
