What Next in JHARKHAND

- The BJP hopes to strike a fresh deal with JMM. Trouble is, they don't trust the Sorens.
- The Congress and JVM are hoping to woo MLAs from BJP and JMM. The Congress doesn't want to ally with the RJD (which has five MLAs) before the assembly polls in Bihar. The bottomline is that nobody wants an election.
- The Congress has ignored requests of state leaders after realising that an alternative coalition is risky. It doesn't want to be humiliated like the BJP was.

mation was announced and the Assembly—constituted five months back—was suspended.

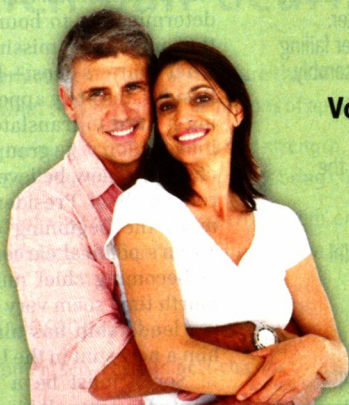

Soren has quite a past. As Union coal minister, he had gone into hiding after a Jharkhand court served an arrest warrant on him in the Chirrudih massacre case in 2004. He resigned only after Prime Minister Manmohan Singh made him do it. In 2005, he quit as Jharkhand chief minister on the UPA leadership's orders after he failed to prove a majority in the Assembly. After he lost the Tamar bypoll in December 2008, he was forced to resign by his alliance partners. Jharkhand has seen seven governments since its creation on November 15, 2000 and Soren has had a key role in five of these changeovers.

In 2009, Jharkhand witnessed mid-term polls under President's rule, which was clamped after Soren failed to get elected to the Assembly and the alliance partners refused to choose his successor. In 2010, the senior Soren's inability to find an assembly seat for himself was the reason for the
