The first World Cup trophy, called the Jules Rimet trophy, was designed in 1930. Brazil won the trophy for the third time in a row in 1970, which led to commissioning of a replacement, the FIFA World Cup Trophy. It is 36-cm high, made of solid 18-carat gold and weighs 6.175 kg. The base—13 cm in diameter—has two layers of malachite.

Jabulani: The Official Matchball

Jabulani means 'to celebrate' in Zulu, but footballers are in no mood to celebrate this Adidas ball. England goalkeeper David James says the 440-g ball is "horrible" while Brazil forward Luis Fabiano calls it "weird".

270 mn* people, or 4 per cent of the world's population, are involved in football as players, coaches and officials

38 mn of them are registered male and female footballers. Since 2000, the number of registered female players grew by 54 per cent to 4.1 million.
