RANBIR UNCUT

Loves reading

Autobiographies. Loved Open by Andre Agassi, Songs my Mother Taught Me by Marlon Brando, Barack Obama's Dreams From My Father.

Recommends

Video games, with age appropriate warnings. Thinks they are the future. Plays Half Life on PS3 as well as Metal Gear Solid and Halo 3 on Xbox

Digs into

The street food in New York, from shawarmas to chicken and rice in white sauce for $5. "Frou frou" places are great too. Likes steaks, Japanese food and Peshawari dishes. "I'm a big fan of anything unhealthy."

Has to Ride on his battery operated Segway every day. 2 a.m. is a great time. "It goes according to your body so you feel you're flying."

Lives by

His own motto. "Success doesn't go to my head, failure doesn't go to my heart."

Dreams of Playing football for Barcelona, with Lionel Messi.

Listens to

Old and new Hindi music. John Mayer, Jack Johnson and U2.

I am not on twitter or facebook. People who follow you like you. It can give you a god complex. How will I know what's wrong with me?

believes, as his grandfather wrote in an autograph in 1952, humility is an artist's greatest virtue. "My mother once told me handsome is as handsome does. Stardom is not about getting a table at a new restaurant. It's about signing someone's autograph book even when you're busy or returning a beggar's smile. I don't believe in bodyguards and dark glasses.

The more attention you ask for, the more you'll get," he says. His mother often features in his conversations and he's proud to admit he is a "mamma's boy"—she still cuts his nails, chooses his toothpaste and monitors his vitamin intake.

He's happiest when he's on a film set or with his friends, most of them second/third generation aspiring filmmakers like B.R. Chopra's grandson Abhay (his sometime roommate in New York) and David Dhawan's son Rohit. "I'm an actor, there's nothing else I can do. At other times, I'm a film groupie. Like right now, I'm dying to see Raavan and Guzarish." Cheesy celebritydom, to which he briefly succumbed when doing joint gush-fests with former girlfriend Deepika Padukone, doesn't in-
