

NATIONAL LAW UNIVERSITY, ORISSA

(established by Act 4 of 2008)

Why NLUO

1. The fast economic growth of recent years has made Orissa a coveted destination for Foreign Direct Investment of approximately Rs. 1,000,00 crores
2. NLUO has unique curricula. In all probability, we offer the most profound example of integration of knowledge. We have gone beyond the conventional inter-disciplinary approach, permitting students of the B.A.L.L.B course to take courses of B.B.A.L.L.B and vice-versa.
3. NLUO is the first national law school of the country which offers three courses in mass communication and legal journalism.
4. NLUO students have the opportunity to pursue a broad and diverse range of specialised programs, for instance, we are at present offering a course on Roman Law. NLUO is the only institution in the country which offers this course.
5. NLUO students are taught by a group of teachers who are dynamic, experienced and, most importantly, committed. The faculty is drawn from premier institutions across India and abroad, with many of them being associated with the leading National Law Schools, giving them the advantage of being a accustomed to the rigors of the law school model.

Prof.(Dr) Faizan Mustafa,
Vice-Chancellor, NLUO

"The National Law University, Orissa has been established with a view to reconcile the study and profession of law. This has in fact been the avowed object of arguably all of such law schools established thus far, yet the disconnect between pedagogy and real time application of law seems to have only aggravated. The reasons are far too many and complex, and for the sake of brevity it should suffice to say that the curricula and teaching methodology failed to impart hard skills that are required at the professional end. While there is apparently too much emphasis on learning black letter law, one notices a corresponding disregard of its pragmatic facets. The law as is in theory, is, if not far, quite a bit removed, from the way it translates into practice and it is this discrepancy that needs to be addressed by legal education. The National Law University, Orissa aims to address these concerns of the legal fraternity by offering co-operative learning opportunity through joint degree programs and designing innovating course curricula that meets the requirement of the time.

We assure you of our commitment to the moulding of professionals at ease in the emerging complexities of the contemporary world. The cross disciplinary emphasis of our program is evident in the manner of our course structuring. We have endeavoured to conflate the study of law with disciplines that we believe are to play a seminal role in the ongoing recasting of the world. Our aim is to secure a faculty committed to the advancement of legal scholarship, and willing to engage in cross disciplinary interactions in order to enrich their teaching. The distinction of our faculty is marked by their open door policy and commitment to not only academics but also the general well being of the students. Apart from the obvious emphasis on academics, we are endeavouring to instil in our students a keen sense of ethics so that they are worthy of the public trust innate to the legal profession."

VISITOR SPEAKS :

"Legal education can also serve as a bridge to careers in teaching, policy-making, the civil services, journalism, international institutions, NGOs and in the long run even electoral politics... While these issues are of general concerns for legal education in our country as a whole, this institution (NLUO) has the opportunity to start afresh and learn from the experiences of the existing National Law Universities. The National Law University for the state of Orissa has the good fortune of being led by Dr. Faizan Mustafa, who is an accomplished scholar in his own right. I sincerely hope that under his stewardship, this institution will gain prominence as a centre for legal education and research."
