DAYANIDHI MARAN

Minister of Textiles

Seam Less

The $52-billion textile industry took the brunt of recession and despite Maran's efforts, it is yet to emerge out of the gloom. Maran has made efforts to locate new markets for exporters, mooted the idea of technical textiles and enhanced funding but the big idea is still missing.

AMBIKA SONI

Minister of Information and Broadcasting

In Her Own Voice

As low profile as her predecessor was not, Soni has initiated a philosophical change in the ministry's big sister approach, mindful of the Emergency baggage she will always carry. But while she has ensured a better dialogue with the media on content regulation, she has been unable to sort out critical issues of cable distribution and uniform FDI regulations necessary for the growth of the sector. All too easily satisfied with minor victories on the film front, she has also tried to kickstart the restructuring of the Prasar Bharati. But lacking an overall vision for liberalisation, she remains a status quoist.

Achievements

- Has lowered temperatures, overcoming the antagonism that has prevailed in the past between the Government and media.
- Has kept away from direct content control, preferring instead to involve the TV industry in the process of "co-regulation".

Failures

- Has failed to initiate modernisation of cable distribution and resolve the problems in the conditional access system and carriage fee.
- Has not been able to sort out the lack of uniformity in FDI regulations across media, whether in print, television or radio.

Is Proud Of

Having got the Planning Commission to part with Rs 660 crore for a national heritage mission on film archives as part of the celebration of a centenary of Indian cinema in 2013.
